

Assistant Professor in Religious Studies (Ethics)

Fairfield University's Department of Religious Studies invites applications for a tenure-track Assistant Professor of Religious Studies in the area of Religious Ethics, Moral Theology, or Theological Ethics, beginning in the fall of 2023. The Department of Religious Studies enjoys a collegial culture that values intellectual exchange and active mentorship of faculty.

The candidate must hold a Ph.D. in the field of Religious Ethics, Moral Theology, or Theological Ethics and be prepared to demonstrate excellence in undergraduate teaching, and show promise of scholarly contributions to the field. Candidates working in either Christian or non-Christian traditions are welcome to apply. The ability to engage with any number of the interdisciplinary programs at the University, such as Peace & Justice Studies, Health Studies, and the Women, Gender & Sexuality Studies among other possibilities, is strongly preferred. The successful candidate will teach 3 sections each semester. These courses can be offered at both the introductory 1000-level as well as the more advanced 2000-level.

Applications should be received by October 17, 2022 in order to receive consideration for preliminary interviews, which are tentatively scheduled later in October and will be conducted virtually via Zoom.
