

J. Bryan Hehir is the Montgomery Professor of the Practice of Religion and Public Life at the Harvard Kennedy School of Government and also serves as the Secretary for Social Service and Health Care in the Archdiocese of Boston. He has held these two positions for the last 15 years. Prior to these positions he served for 19 years on the staff of the U.S.C.C.B. addressing issues of domestic and foreign policy. He taught at Georgetown University's School of Foreign Service from 1984-1992 and again from 2002-2003. He also served as President of Catholic Charities U.S.A. and from 1993-2001 on the faculty of Harvard Divinity School, including 3 years in the office of Dean of the School. His teaching and writing focus on ethics and international affairs and on religion and politics.